Canzoniere

Dante Alighieri (1265 - 1321)
translated by Edward Hayes Plumptre

Canzoniere, or Le Rime (The Rhymes), is a collection of lyric poems written by Dante Alighieri throughout his life. While the rest of Dante's works were prepared by himself for publication, these poems were written by him in letters, as parts of other works or independently, but only collected and ordered much later by modern critics. As the work of a whole life, the poems are varied, and mirror the many different moments of Dante's thoughts, both poetically and philosophically.
